Note 3.--Stanza XVI. And seem mysteriously to shun, The swiftest race that bark can run.--P. 35, I have often, when at sea, amused myself with watching the circular line of horizon maintain its invariable distance; there it is, seeming to bar your further progress, but continually receding at your approach. Note 4.--Song. Away, away, my bounding bark.--P. 36. These lines were written at sea, on a beautiful July evening; the sun just dipping his broad orb in the western waste of waters, and Cape Clear looming faintly...
