Excerpt: . CHAPTER VI THE DEBBIL-DEBBIL DANCE We were going to a Debbil-debbil dance. The King himself had brought the invitation to me in the garden. Missus, he said, spose you come longa Debbildebbil dance, eh? No, thank you, Goggle Eye, I answered. Might it the Debbil-debbils carry me off? He roared with delight at my joke and explained, this one gammon Debbil-debbil. Oh, well, I said, if you are only going to have gammon Debbil-debbils at your party, I ll come. Dank you please, Missus, he said, guessing at my meaning. Then he asked if I would go and see the dancers being dressed for the performance, and I said I would, for I always like to see a blackfellow getting into clothes of any sort. I went in the afternoon and watched, noticing directly I arrived that two of the gentlemen had headaches....
