Plate XV shows these same parts assembled in their correct relation to each other. Valves. The simplest form of valve, the slide valve, is illustrated diagrammatically in Figure 12. It differs from the piston valve only in having its face flat, instead of round, the principle of the two being, however, exactly the same. The valve must fulfill the following conditions: 1. It must admit steam only to the end of the cylinder from which the piston is moving, or is just getting ready to move. of formula 15), and thus reduce the available horse power of the engine. The principal positions of the valve, together with the corresponding positions of the piston, crank and eccentric, are shown...
