All rain water contains carbonic acid, which, when passing through strata containing lime, forms a soluble bi-carbonate. In dropping from the roofs of caverns, evaporation of the watery particles takes place, and the solid portion which remains behind forms stalactitic pendants, which hang like icicles. Their component parts are determined by the nature of the strata through which the water passes. At Portland they are composed of a bi-carbonate of lime, J of an amber colour, the latter character being caused by the diffusion of oxide of iron. A beautifully crystallized form of calcareous spar, not uncommon, is composed of an aggregation of long slender translucent crystals, of a bright amber colour, and breaking with the Geo.
