() teach, but that still there is room left For a farther Enquiry. And we shall find it was not the whole Law of Moses, but the ceremonial Law only, the Laws about external Religion, or religious Worship. For as the essential Part of their Office was confined to positive and instituted Worship, it is natural to believe, that their teaching was of no greater Extent. They do not seem to have had any more Concern about the moral and judicial Law, by virtue of their Office, than any of their Nation. This seems a necessary Consequence of their Office, and therefore the. Precepts about it are scarce any. The only Place that looks like a Precept is that before quoted Place of Deui. xxxi. 9. where the Priests are commanded to read the Law to all the People; but by reading the whole Passage, it is easy to observe, that the Charge of keeping the Law is given to the Priests, in Conjunction with the Elders, of the Children of Israel, that is, the whole Sanhedrim. And the Charge of reading the Law once in seven Years, publicly, to all the People, is also given to the same Sanhedrim, in Conjunction with the Priests. And thus also it was practised in the three noted Instances upon Record. When the People were settled in the promised Land, Joshua the chief Magistrate assembled the People, and read the Law, pursuant to this Command, Joh. viii....
