Excerpt: .not be comprehended by his disciples and cotemporaries. Thus the above considerations are not decisive, and we therefore turn to the expressions concerning the premundane existence and heavenly origin of the Messiah, with the question: Could the Baptist have really held such tenets? That from the words, John i. 15, 27, 30: He that cometh after me is preferred before me; for he was before me, 6 6-iou fiov epxofievog tfinpooOev fi, ov-yeyovej , or i npurog fiov yvt nothing but dogmatical obstinacy can banish the notion of pre-existence, is seen by a mere glance at such expositions as this of Paulus: He who in the course of time comes after me; has so appeared in my eyes, litnpooBiv fiov, that he (8tc--uore, premiss--conclusion!) deserves rather from his rank and character to be called the first. With preponderating arguments more unprejudiced commentators have maintained, that the reason here given why Jesus, who appeared after the Baptist in point of time, had the precedence of him in dignity, is the prc-existence of the former.t We have here obviously the favourite dogma of the fourth evangelist, the eternal pre-existence of the-oyoc, present indeed to the mind of that writer, who had just been inditing his proem, but that it was also present to the mind of the Baptist is another question. The most recent expositor allows that the sense in which the evangelist intends npurog fiov, must have been very remote from the Baptist s point...
