Charles Kisselman Imbrie, Born December 15, 1814; Died November 20, 1891 Father was born in the City of Philadelphia, on the fifteenth day of December, 1814. He died at Jersey City, November 20th, 1891. Grandfather was James Imbrie, a merchant of Philadelphia, born in Scotland. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were all ministers of the Church of Scotland. Grandmother was Margaretta Kisselman, the daughter of Frederic Kisselman, a gentleman who, during the Revolution, honored the King and suffered in consequence. He died of yellow fever; and was buried before his wife, who had removed from the city to escape the epidemic, knew her loss. The wife was left a widow with eleven children, and with resources enough to bring them up and educate them properly. She was a woman of strong character, and lived to a great age beloved by her children and grandchildren, with a love not quite unmingled with awe. The Kisselmans were members of the Episcopal Church; and it is only very recently that the family pew in old St. Peters passed into other hands after possession during nearly a hundred years. When father was a boy of nine or ten years of age, the family moved from a house on Spruce Street between Third and Fourth, to one on Sixth Street facing Washington Square. This was a pleasant old-fashioned house, and the location at that time was charming. With this house were associated most of father s memories of his old home. Nor were his memories those of place alone. Grandfather was a man of singular beauty of countenance, of courtly manners, of literary tastes, of strict integrity,...
