Excerpt: . . . raiyats stating the number of pdwdi held and the rent paid by each. Having furnished this account, any new raiyats who may wish to have lands in the village, after having the quantity and rent settled, have a goti given to them. If any of the old raiyats require any new land, a goti is taken for that, but not for the old cultivation. The makato collects the rent as the instalments become due, according to the abovementioned account given to the farmer; and all differences as to the amount of rent payable by a raiyat, if any ever arise, which very seldom happens, are settled by the opinion of the makato. So well does this mode answer in practice, that in point of fact a dispute as to the amount of rent owed by a raiyat is of rare occurrence. When a farmer wishes to cheat a raiyat, he accuses him of having cultivated more land than he is entitled to, or of owing him maswdr or grain rent for land held in excess; and if such a thing as a dispute as to the amount of rent owed ever does arise, the mdkatos evidence is generally considered conclusive by both parties. (3) Pdh. --The importance of the pdhn, or priest of the village gods, may be inferred from the current phrase in which his duties are contrasted with those of the makato. The pdkn, it is said, makes the village gdon bandtd),...
